Singapore Airlines launches the longest scheduled commercial flight

The first new non-stop flight between Singapore and New York departed Singapore Changi International Airport on 11th October. The flight duration was 17 hours 52 minutes.

The flight last took place in 2013 with an A340-500. That was discontinued because of the high costs involved (the A340-500 has four engines, and was fuel-thirsty compared with the new generation aircraft).

Unions have also called for public transportation workers in cities throughout Italy to strike for 24 hours on 26th October.
